A brief intro to this website would go here. It could say something like Eleanor Roosevelt: The Courage to Lead examines the many roles Eleanor Roosevelt played in her life, and the continuing legacy of her words and actions. In addition, this site includes an extensive archive of documents, images, and multimedia, as well as teaching materials.

Eleanor Roosevelt wanted to speak for herself. Using her 7,500 “My Day” columns, 556 articles, 27 books, and 496 radio and television programs as a one-woman teach-in, ER dramatized complex issues for her audience. Sometimes, they followed her call to action. Sometimes they questioned her position. ER kept writing. “If you give up, you are abandoning your own principles.”

My Day: Aug. 29,1952

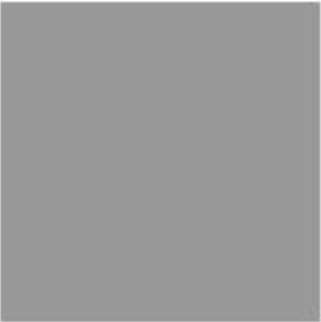

Description:

Biographical Synopsis of Interviewee: This is dummy copy from another website just for show of layout. Jesús Aranda Morales was born in Gran Morelos, Chihuahua, México, in 1936; he started working when he was only nine years old; years later, in 1957, at the age of twenty, he came to the United States; he worked in the cotton and cucumber fields of Texas and New Mexico and the beet fields of Nebraska and Montana. Summary of Interview: Mr. Morales traveled to Chihuahua, Chihuahua, México, in order to begin the hiring process for the bracero program; the only requirement was a Mexican Military ID card; he waited at El Trocadero, a processing center there in Chihuahua, for eight days.
